Mr. Barbara Dreyfus:

I return herewith what you deceptively described as a "brief."

It turns out to be largely a collection of reprints of press releases.

When you demur about a price of $10 for a factual book of more than 500 pages and ask $5 for a stapled collection of diatribes you call a brief I find myself wondering, as I did when I listened to you, whether you have permitted yourself any autonomy in your own thoughts and scales of values and importances.

What I skimmed does the work of those it supposedly attacks.

Not that you don't have the right to believe the world is all triangles.

Regretfully,

Harold Weisberg
